Gas Tax To Be Used On Mokena St. Improvement

Word has been received from Mr. Walsh of Joliet who recently was the successful bidder for improving the Front street in Mokena with an asphalt sealcoat, that work will be begun on it next Monday morning. The village authorities have been insisting that this work be done while the weather is still warm. It has so happened that in recent years work on this street has been done in cold weather with very unsatisfactory results.

The cost of improving the Front street is to be paid out of the state gas tax due Mokena.

FORMER MOKENA WOMAN BADLY HURT IN CRASH

Harry Schoen of Mokena received word Saturday that his ex-wife had figured in a serious auto and truck accident near Pipestone, Minn., on Friday.

Mr. Schoen divorced his wife about a year ago. She re-married in North Dakota and her second husband was killed in an auto accident two weeks after their marriage. She married for the third time and was riding with her husband and another driver in a loaded beer truck when an automobile crashed into the big truck forcing it off the road and turning over. The former Mrs. Schoen suffered a spinal injury. Attending physicians say if she does live, she will never be able to walk again.

Waiting WPA O. K. Ties Up Street Work

The citizens of Mokena have been objecting of late to the extremely poor condition of many of the streets of the village. There are many deep ruts and holes making rough driving. The village board has been considering improving these streets all summer long through W. P. A. but the extremely slow manner in which this body functions has resulted in the proposed improvements of these streets being delayed. Sometime ago a village wide project amounting to approximately $58,000 was written up for WPA but so far nothing has been heard as to whether or not this project has been or will be approved.

Band Amateur Show Progressing

Steal Building Material From Lot

Here is something in the way of petty thievery. If you are building a new garage, or house or barn it will almost behoove you to have someone watch the lumber pile. The past week D. Norris of Chicago started building a double garage on his property west of Orland Park on the south side of 143rd St.

Composition shingles, lumber building blocks, tiles had been hauled on the premises the latter part of last week. A double garage is to be constructed in which Mr. Norris intends to reside until the spring when he will build a new dwelling. Chas. Haehnlein carpenter contractor of Orland Park, had been given the job to build the double garage. He was greatly surprised Tuesday morning when he came to the place and found practically all the building material had been hauled away during the night. Truck tire marks indicated that the thieves headed south on 108th Av., but no further trace has been found of them. Among the materials stolen were 10 squares composition shingles, flooring, 2 garage doors 8 x 7 feet and some sewer tiles.

Voters Turn Thumbs Down on New Courthouse

The voters of Will County virtually shouted "No" as they voted against the issuance of $486,000 in bonds for a proposed new courthouse and county jail, at the special election held Tuesday.

The bond issue turned down was to have helped finance the building of a new courthouse and jail with PWA assistance at Joliet. The entire cost of the proposed structure was to have been $850,000. The people generally showed that they are much opposed to any proposition which may create additional tax.

About 15,000 votes were cast thru out the county and of these 3,335 votes were in favor of the issue and 11,462 against. The rural sections were for the largest part dead set against the matter. It is said it cost the county $9,000 to hold this special election.

Three Tinley Boys Hurt In Auto Crash In Alabama

Three Tinley Park boys, Marvin Vogt, Howard Mager, and Irving Siemsen figured in a serious automobile accident near Selma, Ala. 850 miles from Tinley Park last Friday night.

They were on a vacation trip with Marvin driving the car. A negro was driving a span of mules and a wagon along the highway without having any warning lantern.

The driver of the car following him was unable to see him until nearly on top of him and then in order to avoid striking the wagon he swerved around and in some manner the car skidded directly in front of the path of the Tinley car.

Mr. Vogt was unable to stop in time, striking the rear end of the car. All three boys were knocked unconscious and were quite badly shaken up cut and bruised. They were removed to a hospital at Selma where Howard Mager after regaining consciousness telephoned his parents in Tinley Park advising them of the mishap. Mr. Vogt's parents were also notified. His father Henry C. Vogt and his son-in-law Herman Gee left Saturday for Selma. Upon arrival, they found the boys improving and Howard Mager was able to return home with Mr. Gee Tuesday.

Irving Siemsen and Marvin Vogt however were still in the hospital and are not expected back until the end of this week when they will return by train accompanied by Mr. Vogt. The car in which the boys were driving which is owned by Marvin Vogt was almost completely wrecked.

"On the contrary," said I, "we're practically home. I'm going to get pen and ink—for you to take down."

Leaving him staring, I entered the room on my left, passed to a table and dipped a pen in some ink. Then I came back and gave it to Herrick and watched him begin to descend.

Brenda, of course, was wide-eyed; but it was not for me to tell her what we had found.

We waited together in silence till Herrick came back—alone.

"Elizabeth wants you again," was as much as he said.

In some surprise, I took the torch from him and again descended the stair.

As I entered the little chamber—"Look," said Elizabeth, pointing. "Is that all right?"

I stooped to regard the vellum. She had written a line beneath her grandfather's name.

"Elizabeth Virgil, Countess of Brief, only child of the foregoing's first-born son."

"Yes," said I. "There's no mistake about that."

She gave me the pen, and picked up the great gold ring. Then she turned to look again at the body, sunk in its stall.

"Seeing's believing," she said. "But no chemist could do today what Gollanx has done."

That, of course, was most true. By every right, the body should have been dust. Instead, it had the air of a waxwork. And that, I suppose, was why it was in no way offensive, but only remarkable.

After a long look—"We'd better be going," she said, and turned to the stair.

There was now no cause for haste, for leave before midnight we dared not, in case Brief was not asleep; and that was the hour at which Winter was to be by the mouth of the drive. (He, of course, knew no more than that we were within the tower and that all was well, for I had twice sent him that signal a short half-hour before dawn. This, from the leads of the tower, which were easily reached.) Indeed, we were faced with the prospect of being confined for three hours with nothing to do, for though we were all worn out, excitement and impatience, between them, would not allow us to rest. But first, of course, we had to cover our tracks.

(Here let me say that I make no excuse for the outlook which I have this moment set down. It was ours, at that time; and if I am to be honest, it must be declared.)

Now that we knew the secret, it took us a very short while to return to their ancient order the elements we had displaced, but dust that the years have laid cannot be reproduced in ten minutes of time, and half an hour went by before I was satisfied with the look of the thirty-sixth step, within whose stone the key to the chamber lay. Whilst I was attending to this, with Brenda to give me light, my lady and Herrick together composed a full note of what we had found in the chamber and what the statement set forth. They were at work in the bedroom, that is to say, the uppermost room of the tower.

I had finished my work on the step and, with Brenda behind me, was going upstairs to the bedroom quietly enough. We had passed by the door and I was about, being by, to relight my torch, when a sound there was no mistaking rapped out of the dark. It was the clack of a latch.

The two of us stood still as death. Again the iron was raised—by somebody standing on the other side of the door . . . and pressure was put on the oak—which could not open because we had made it fast . . . Then whoever was there gave in, and the latch fell back into place.

I was up the stairs in a flash, to give the alarm.

Elizabeth paled, and Herrick stifled an oath.

"If we can, we must bolt," said I. "By way of the courtyard, of course; and so to the belvedere."

"Is that step all right?" said Herrick.

"Thank God, yes," said I. "I was on my way up."

As luck would have it, our stuff was ready to hand, and before two minutes had passed, we had packed it anyhow and were ready to leave. We had intended, of course, to restore to the rooms we had used the order we had found in them when we came, but this was not now worth doing, and so we let them be.

As the four of us stole past the door, the latch was raised and let fall and the oak was urged, as though some one refused to allow that the bolts had been shot.

As fast as I dared, I led the way down the stair . . .

We were, I suppose, some 50 seconds too late.

As I gained the hall, I heard the sound that I dreaded some 18 inches away—a key being tried in the door at the foot of the stair.

It was, of course, tried to no purpose. The door was heavily barred. But it meant that both exits were held, and that we were caught in the tower as rats in a trap.

CHAPTER VI

I often think that we fully deserved our plight, for, once we possessed the secret we set out to find, we should not have lost a moment in leaving the tower. To cover our tracks was essential, but that we could have done in a quarter of an hour. Then again we needed the darkness, but dusk would have served our turn. And that we had. We preferred to ignore a grave peril because for 43 hours it had never lifted its head, losing sight of the staring fact that if it should lift its head, we were bound to be caught.

Be these things as they may, move. If you should get clear . . . "I'll give you a flash," said I, "from the bend of the stair."

Herrick nodded and took out a cigarette.

By this time those in the courtyard were fairly assaulting the oak, and since, when the latch was drawn, the door could be moved to and fro for an eighth of an inch, a not inconsiderable uproar invaded the room.

"Put out that light," said Herrick.

As I did his bidding, he stepped to the door of the chamber and flung it back with a crash.

The uproar beyond stopped dead. Then—

"Who the devil is there?" roared the steward. "Open at once."

A thick voice replied in German. "What does this mean—disturbing respectable people at this time of

"Too easy," I said, with an eye on the way we had come. "And if I'm not back in three minutes, please give me your word you'll go on. I cannot tell what may happen. If there's a hitch, it may be better for us to leave by the lower door. But we couldn't do that unless we were sure you'd escaped."

Elizabeth shook her head.

"If you don't come, I shall use my judgment," she said.

I shrugged my shoulders and went. There was no time to argue. Any moment someone might visit the upper floor.

I have so far said nothing of what we were most afraid of that summer night—the entrance of Percy Virgil upon the scene. Not only was the fellow efficient—he would have secured both doors before he did anything else—but he had good when I heard that key move in the lock, I was ready to do myself violence for throwing away the chance of escape we had had: for, had we behaved—not with prudence, but common sense, we should at that time have been nearing the mouth of the drive.

"On the Contrary," I Said, "We're Practically Home."

After a moment's hesitation, I led the way through the hall and into the room beyond. Then I shut the door behind Herrick, lighted a torch and threw the beam on the floor.

I touched Elizabeth's arm.

"First, tell me this," I said. "Is the roof any good?"

"I've no idea," she said, and pushed back her sable hair. "There might be a way—I don't know."

I shook my head.

To seek such a path by night would have been a desperate venture for Herrick and me: the presence of our companions ruled such an enterprise out.

"Then I can think of nothing," said I, "except to draw them away from the upper door. If we can only do that, we may still get clear. Out of the upper door, where we heard them first—across the landing you spoke of into your suite—down your staircase-turret—out of the castle and up to the belvedere. Winter will still be there, if we can be quick, to lead us over the ridge and down to the Rolls."

"A feint?" said Herrick, frowning.

"That's my idea," said I. "A demonstration down here—at the lower door. I admit it's a damned thin chance, but what else can we do?"

"What sort of demonstration?" said Elizabeth.

I looked at Herrick.

"D'you think you could do it?" I said. "Disguise your voice and—parley with them in German? I mean . . ."

Herrick's face was a study.

"I see," he said slowly. "Parley? And how, when the parley's over, do I get out? Up a hundred steps and then through a house I don't know. Or don't I get out?"

"I shall come back," I said, "as soon as they're safe in the suite."

With my words we heard somebody pound on the lower door.

"Who is within?" they demanded.

"Open at once."

Herrick looked at Elizabeth.

"Is that his lordship?" he said. "I'd like to, er, parley with him."

My lady smiled.

"That was Bertram," she said. "The steward. I'm afraid he may get rather fussed."

"A little bit pompous?" said Herrick.

"A shade, perhaps. But a most respectable man."

"Leave him to me," said Herrick, and settled his coat. "And when I take up the running, stand by to night? Go and wipe your snout, you old toss-pot, and burn the towel."

A savage hiccup subsided this most offensive command.

Then a wave of scandalized consequence burst on the lower door. The oak was pounded and shaken, and choking cries of protest stood out of a motley clamor of orders and threats.

I touched Elizabeth's arm and made for the stair.

As the girls stumbled on to my heels, I opened the upper door.

Beyond this, curtains were hanging, heavy and thick. I cautiously lifted one, to see the broadest landing I ever knew. In its midst was an oval well, some 40 feet wide, with a bronze balustrade about it and the heads of twin flights of stairs upon either side. (To give some idea of their size, each step was but two inches high, and some twelve feet long.) The landing itself was dim, but a brilliance rose out of the well and the sumptuous flights of stairs ran down into light. So far as I could see, there was nobody hereabouts, but the sound of voices and movements came from a lower floor.

Elizabeth, peering beside me, caught my wrist.

"Quick," she breathed, and urged me across the carpet to a door which was close to the head of the farther stair.

An instant later, the three of us entered her suite.

cause to remember both Herrick and me; and though we made good our escape, if he set eyes upon us the police would be at Raven very nearly as soon as the Rolls. But now I disclose this dread, for as I whipped over the landing, I heard his sinister voice.

I think he was giving some order. Be that as it may, his unmistakable accents rang out of the well.

In a flash I was past the curtains and back in the tower and was cursing its stairway anew, because to go down it too fast was to break your neck.

As I came within earshot—"Only let me get out," belched Herrick, fumbling the bolts of his door. "I'll teach you to talk to your betters. I warn you, Bertie, I'll tie your snout round your neck."

And there I flashed my torch—and saw him leap for the stair.

I turned and climbed before him for all I was worth . . .

Eighty-eight merciless steps, wedge-shaped, steep and naked, curling between walls that were hostile and, when you sought for a handhold, bruised your nails . . .

After a little, you seemed to make no progress, to be no more than the pitiful, captive squirrel climbing his endless wheel . . . Up, up, up . . . For less than a minute, I know; but such is the power of apprehension, it seemed an age.

Far More Good Snakes Than Bad Ones, Yet All Are Doomed Without Reason

The sight of a cottage owner on a lake in Oakland county beating a harmless garter snake to death as it attempted to crawl over his lawn calls to mind the many unwarranted prejudices that exist in the animal world, particularly among mankind, observes Albert Stoll Jr., writing in the Detroit News.

Snakes, toads, frogs, newts, skunks, weasels, porcupines, multitudes of insects, some birds and many other smaller mammals repel most of us. According to our own interpretation they have no rights, and any interference, imaginary or otherwise, with our plans or selfish desires brings on the death warrant. And our definition of good and bad among the lower creatures depends principally on our aversion to the species. We condemn snakes because there are some that are poisonous; there are far more good snakes than bad ones, yet they all suffer the same end.

The fisherman shoots merganser ducks, blue herons and kingfishers because he thinks they are eating his trout. He doesn't know for certain, but according to his light they have no business on his trout stream even though they were there long before the angler.

And so down the entire list of birds of prey, cold-blooded amphibians and reptiles; predatory animals and winged and crawling insects. We destroy more often without reason or justice thinking that we are better able to judge the worth of creatures than the forces that were responsible for their creation. And in so doing, more frequently than not, we destroy a balance that Nature ordained when the world was created.

Lamp Patented in 1798

In 1798 the first lamp patent was issued to John Love, of South Carolina, for a tallow lamp. The earliest patented lamp known is the nursery lamp made by William Hode, of Boston, dated 1812. The second earliest example, says the Rocky Mountain Herald, appeared nearly two decades later, in 1831, and the patent was issued to John W. Schulz and William Trull. Between the granting of these two patents 28 others had been issued.

Lesson for October 2

THE ONE TRUE GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:2, 3; Isaiah 45:22; Mark 12:28-34; I Corinthians 8:4-6.
GOLDEN TEXT—And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.—Deuteronomy 6:5.

Today we begin a series of studies which should be of unusual value, a consideration of the Ten Commandments in the light of the teachings of Jesus and related New Testament passages. It is appropriate to point out that, far from being outmoded, the Ten Commandments are really the basis of all moral law. They need a diligent re-study and re-emphasis in our day of disregard of moral standards. As interpreted by the Lord Jesus and applied to our daily living, the truth of these commandments should be brought home to every boy and girl and man and woman in our Bible schools.

The lessons begin at the right point, for the first commandment properly deals with our conception of God. What a man thinks about God determines his entire outlook on life. We begin right when we declare that there is but one God.

I. The Truth Stated—There Is One True God (Exod. 20:2, 3).

Jehovah means "I will be what I will be," or "I am that I am." (Exod. 3:14). His very name declares God to be the self-existent, eternal one. How infinitely gracious then is the use of the word "thy" in verse 2! He—the great I AM—is my God.

There are many things concerning which we do not speak dogmatically. There are even Christian doctrines about which spiritual and earnest men may honestly differ, but regarding God we say with absolute assurance and complete exclusiveness—there is but one true God. If He is what He claims to be, if God is not to be declared to be a liar, then it is beyond the realm of possibility that there could be any other God. Hear it, ye men and women of America who in an enlightened land and age bow down in heathenish worship "before the god of gold, the god of self, the god of wine, the god of success, the god of fame, the goddess of pleasure, the god of licentiousness." The one true God says, "I am Jehovah . . . thou shalt have no other gods before me."

II. The Truth Explained.

1. God is our Deliverer (Exod. 20:2). He who brought Israel out of the bondage of Egypt is the one, and the only one who can deliver men from the bondage of sin. If you think that a sinner is not in bondage read Titus 3:3 and Romans 6:16 and then read the verses following in both passages, and not only see but follow the way of deliverance.

2. God is our Saviour (Isa. 45:22). Again note that "there is none else" who can save. "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

It was this verse that led one of the world's greatest preachers, Charles Haddon Spurgeon, to accept Christ as his Saviour when he was just a humble lad. Perhaps some boy or girl who reads these lines may do likewise, and become a great instrument in God's hand. Teacher, perhaps the Spurgeon of the next generation will be in your class today. Win him for Christ!

3. God is Love (Mark 12:28-34). In I John 4:8 the truth is stated in all its glorious simplicity. "God is love." He not only loves us, and calls on us to love Him, and enables us to love both Him and our neighbors, but He "is love." Love is of the very essence of God's nature. He is the source of all true love. He is love.

It was for this reason that Jesus replied to the question of the scribe as He did, directing the whole life of man into love toward God and his fellow man.

It is worthy of careful note and emphasis in our teaching that the recognition and appreciation of this truth on the part of the scribe brought him near to the Kingdom of God, but not into it. He was "not far from," but he was not in it. It is terrifying to think how close men may come to entering without doing so. Reader, have you entered into eternal life through Jesus Christ?

4. God is our Father (I Cor. 8:4-6). Paul is speaking of the eating of meat offered to idols, and points out that such false gods are really nothing. This is true not only of the idols of wood and stone, but of supernatural beings, demons worshipped by primitive peoples. There are such spirit beings, active even in our day in such cults as spiritism, but they are not divine, not true gods (v. 5).

The true God is a Father, yes "the Father," of whom are all things and we in Him (v. 6). As there is but one God, there is also but one Lord, Jesus Christ through whom the one God has wrought all things, and through whom we also come to God. If we have Christ we have all; if we have not Him we have nothing. Is He your Saviour?

Smart New Fashions For Fall and Winter

BOTH these dresses are so pretty and so simple that you will want to make them up several times, in different colors. And with such beautifully simple designs, whose whole charm is a matter of line, you can use colors as gay as you please, now that gay colors are smart, and they look so pretty in the fall. If you've never done much sewing, here's a fine chance to find out what a satisfaction it is to make yourself something. These designs are so easy to do.

A Charming School Dress.

This is a classic style in which growing girls always look pretty. The snug waist and flaring skirt are so becoming, and just grown up enough to delight them! In wool crepe, cashmere, gingham or jersey, with fresh white collar and sleeve bands, it will be your daughter's favorite school frock. Make one version of it in plaid.

Scalloped-Trimmed Day Frock.

You should certainly have several dresses made like this—it fits so beautifully and looks so smart. Darts at the waistline give it becoming slimmness. The high square neckline and "shrugged shoulder" sleeves are very new. It's the useful kind of dress you can wear for shopping and business as well as around the house. Make it up in silk crepe, flannel, sheer wool or home-keeping cottons.

The Patterns.

1454 is designed for sizes 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16 years. Size 10 requires 2½ yards of 39-inch material without nap. Collar and cuffs in contrast require ¾ yard.

1576 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.
Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. ### TINLEY PARK POST NO. 615

Tinley Park Legion Post held their regular social meeting Tuesday night. Comrade Robertson reported two teams chosen to obtain 1939 dues. Points being awarded for obtaining dues, by certain dates, stating, "Members on the winning team would be made happy while members on the losing team would be sorry." Concluding dates are Oct. 18th and Nov. 11th. Letters are being mailed, advising each member which team he is on. So Comrades don't forget that the Legion is fighting for a better nation, state and community, while helping our younger generation to become better citizens. When you make your contacts also remember Americanism, Rehabilitation and service activities and especially during this period of world strife that the American Legion is 100 percent against all subversive activities which tend to destroy the principles of Justice, Freedom and Democracy.

Comrades Fay, Freitag and Gunn served delicious meat sandwiches, cake and coffee which the boys enjoyed. All went home feeling that another day had gone in which they had done another good deed by coming out to the meeting. The meetings are being well attended and any who have been negligent for the past year will be surprised at the number present, if you attend our next meeting October 4 at 8 p. m. in the Tinley Park School.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Reality" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, September 25.

The Golden Text was, "Thy throne, O God is for ever and ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre" (Psalms 45:6).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I will extol thee, my God, O king; and I will bless thy name for ever and ever. All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord; and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power; To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations" (Psalms 145:1, 10-13).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "God creates all forms of reality. His thoughts are spiritual realities" (p. 513).

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

New Lenox—Fire equipment is wanted by the people of New Lenox. Picture a bungalow of frame construction. Its modest. But its home to that man and family. Have that home go up in flames. No adequate fire equipment available, then you will see the value of being equipped for emergencies from flames. New Lenox we're for your efforts to get that new fire truck.

Mokena—The Civic club wants a symbol to suggest its ideals. Permit me to suggest one, The Covered Wagon. Our pioneer forefathers in covered wagons went west to found new homes. Today the frontiers are gone, but the frontiers of the mind are still with us. With almost a third of the country's population relying on the government for a living, this country should be sold on the idea of the pioneer spirit of being independent and not dependent. This idea is best typified by the Covered Wagon. We need this pioneer spirit if democracy is to remain.

Tinley Park—The children are back in school. New systems, ideas, and methods come and go in education. The best teacher for centuries however, has never been replaced. Pain, I do not mean whipping the child, has stood out as the teacher par excellence. Life is a trial and error process. From pain, mental and physical, our mistakes, we learn the better way of life. Life is an educational process from the cradle to the grave. It's pain that points the better way.

War—With war talk in Europe, why hasn't it started? Nobody wants to start it. Why? Since the World War, science has made the battlefield more destructive. Men in high military commands in Europe were in the World War. They know what war is. Inwardly they know that war is hell, that's why we have seen so much bluffing and such little shooting in Europe to date. Let's hope they don't start it and we can stay out of it.

Experts—"Zeb," a fellow said to me one day, "What right have you got to be telling the good people in Orland, Mokena, New Lenox, Tinley Park and Frankfort about all these things in your Bugle Calls column, when you're not an expert on any of this stuff?"

"Right Harry," I replied. "And I don't want to be an expert." This country is overloaded with experts. Let me cite an example.

Uncle Carl Laemmle made his start in the moving picture business in Wisconsin. He went to California and founded Universal Pictures. For a while the company prospered. Then the payroll became overloaded with relatives in soft jobs. Times changed. The reverses worried Uncle Carl. He hired an efficiency expert.

One day there was a fire on the movie lot. A property man ran to the storehouse for a fire extinguisher. "No," answered the storekeeper "You have got to have an OK from the boss before you can take this fire extinguisher." The set burned. They fired the efficiency expert; he was too expert with his rules on fire extinguishers.

Around the anvil in the village blacksmith shop, and the cannon ball stove in the rear of the general store, more common sense discussions on the practical problems of life have taken place than in twenty annual conventions of experts.

Our greatest man, Lincoln, was a product of small town life. He just didn't wait to become an expert on one thing. He pitched into the problems of life as they came along.

If the United States is to stem the drift toward dictatorship, we must have a more active interest in government. It's the indifference of the voters in the big cities that has permitted boss rule.

If democracy should be washed out of this country which I trust and pray it won't, it's last stand will be in the villages and small cities. They call us "hicks," but I'm proud to be a "hick." Zeb Potter.

The senator's well-fed form loomed big and bulky in the doorway of the Weekly Blade and Ledger office. "How about that speech of mine?" The senator's voice was commanding as he eased his two hundred and fifty pounds into the editor's easy chair.

The editor nervously peered at the senator over the tops of his spectacles. "I don't understand, sir," his thin voice broke nervously as he set the page proof down on the table before him.

"You'll understand when I get through with you," barked the senator. He mopped his face as his fat rimmed eyes took in the surroundings, not too prosperous.

"But sir, I did the best I could. I gave your story the best position on the front page. Right hand side." With a worried look the editor, slender and slight, looked at the large well fed body of the politician.

"I have had enough of your excuses," he bellowed, sticking a pudgy finger in his vest pocket for a cut of tobacco, "from now on the 'Weekly Clarion' in Milledgesville gets my printing and advertising, see."

The "see" was like a crack of a whip on the back of the timid editor. Spurred to action as he saw the overweight representative of the people lumbering out the doorway, he called.

"In this speech of yours, you complain about, you used the personal pronoun 'I' thirty-five times. I do not have that many 'I's' in my type case. That why your speech was not set up complete. My weekly paper is hand set."

At this bold and courageous retort from the suffering editor, the senator's florid face seemed to whiten as his self-inflated ego collapsed like a punctured tire.

The End.

Righteousness Exalts a Nation

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

"Righteousness exalteth a nation."

This is one of the oldest of proverbs: so old, in fact, that to many men today, whole nations seem to have forgotten it.

The nations seem to have forgotten, too, that comforting promise from the same font of wisdom:

"The work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever."

That, too, is a proved and ancient verity.

But these, of course, are modern times. The old, old knowledge is outmoded. Yet nations, as well as men, would do well to pause in the rush and whirl of present-day ambitions to ponder the ancient truths anew.

Nations, as well as men, would do well to consider again the recorded wisdom which has guided so many generations of our forebears.

Nations, as well as men, might measure again the power of truth against false and bombastic phrases, the value of directness and simplicity against shrewdness and evasion.

Nations, as well as men, might find in the deeper wisdom of the heart the solution of those problems which today seem so hopelessly to frustrate the mind.

In our own nation, great leaders have acknowledged their reliance on this ancient wisdom.

"My principle is to do whatever is right," was Thomas Jefferson's own summation of that guidance.

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right" was the expression of Lincoln's approach to one of the most serious internal problems in our history.

It is in this spirit that humanity hopes the leaders of the nations may today approach their problems—both within and without their borders.

Clad again in the "armor of righteousness" their strength should be great.

Celebration of Columbus Day Recalls Three Famed Replicas

Each year, as America observes Columbus day, attention is focused on Jackson park in Chicago, where stands the sole survivor of three caravels—exact replicas of Columbus' Pinta, Nina and Santa Maria—which were constructed in Spain for the Columbian exposition. The Pinta and Nina were destroyed by fire in 1919 but the Santa Maria (in the background) is still afloat. The boats in which Columbus made his pioneering voyage are dwarfed by modern ocean liners. For comparison, note the rowboats in foreground.

Common People Could End Wars

Again the dogs of war are barking in Europe and again millions of people are in danger of their lives, again billions of dollars of property may be destroyed, and all for what?

Twenty years ago the greatest lie that ever was told, was that, that war was to end all wars, but instead it was the breeder of more wars.

How short lived are the memories of the tragic days of 20 years ago. The world is still suffering from the devastating effects of the last war and warring nations have refused to pay back the billions borrowed from Uncle Sam, so they could use this money to prepare for the war now threatening.

All the preaching and teaching of all the churches for the past hundred of years appear to have been in vain. No one seems to consider the Bible any more and only selfish ideas and desires appear to be the order of the world.

All conferences, preaching, prayers, etc., will avail nothing as long as enmity and hatred are allowed to poison the minds of mankind.

There is only one solution to end all wars and that is for all soldiers, sailors and the common people in general to refuse to kill one another just to please some dictator or selfish interests. When people the world over will throw down implements of warfare and tell the war lords to do their own fighting, there will be an end to war, but until the common people get out of their still savage state, there cannot be world peace.

The common people of the world, and they alone, are to blame for the world chaos. When they get to the point where they will refuse to be used as targets and to go like sheep to the slaughter and demand that the teachings of Christ be applied and given an opportunity to work, there is no need to look for world peace.

Let the common people of all the nations of the world refuse to fight, this including the army and navy and air forces of every nation and insist that all national and international disputes be settled in courts of law. Stop this crazy notion that objectives can only be attained by armed force.

Every war breeds another war. The defeated nation continues to nurse hate for the enemy and is watching every opportunity to "get even" again which means another war and thus the same routine of killing, destruction and spreading of lies and hatreds are continued.

ORLAND SCHOOL NEWS

A new Freshman this week is Shirley Vail.

Latin class students are beginning to feel quite proud of themselves since they have learned about fifty words in Latin now, and can read sentences.

Those girls having completed making aprons in sewing class are: Mildred Doctor, Margaret Bergin, Alma Wozniak, Vera Zerbs and Bernice Rauch.

Sports at Orland Park have had many enthusiasts these opening weeks of school. During the high school recreation period two games have led in popularity. One group has been playing football while the other has been playing Soccer, a game which has not been played by our high school boys before this season. Soccer is a very interesting and fast game which is proving to be very popular and will be one of our main sports.

New goal posts have been erected and lines marked out for a football field. The football squad is having some real workouts, and they have possibilities of developing into a real hard-hitting team. About 24 men have turned out for foot ball and have been put through the rudiments of the game.

Soccer goal ports will be erected and field lines marked out within the next day or two, so that we will have two complete athletic fields for our boys to play on.

"Rockets" Carried 96,000 Passengers During 1st Year

Following on the heels of the observance by the Rock Island Lines of the first year's operation of the Des Moines-Chicago streamline Rocket train, held Monday of this week, announcement is made that a similar observance will be held Thursday on the two Kansas City-Twin City Rockets, in commemoration of the first year's service of those trains, inaugurated September 29, 1937. Figures compiled by the Rock Island railroad show that the Des Moines-Chicago Rocket carried over 96,000 passengers during its first year of operation, and that the Twin City-Kansas City Rockets carried more than 76,000 passengers during the year.

On board the Rocket leaving Minneapolis Thursday morning were delegations representing the Minneapolis and St. Paul Commercial organizations, while the sister train, leaving Kansas City that morning had a delegations from Kansas City Chamber of Commerce. The Twin City delegations were met at Albert Lee, Minn., by a committee representing the Chamber of Commerce of that city, who entertained them between trains.

The Kansas City delegation was met by representatives of commercial organizations in Excelsior Springs, Mo., and entertained them.

One of the features of the observance was the presence of hostesses, under the name "Miss Rock Island Lines", who served the passengers from the huge birthday cakes provided by the Dining Car Department.

NAVY DAY

● Battleships float and sailors climb ropes — but here are a few things you never knew about your United States Navy!

Each ship has its sick bay. Above is the dispensary on the U. S. S. Salt Lake City. Running this part of the navy is the medical corps, which also takes a leading hand in health measures in Uncle Sam's outlying possessions.

The farmer feeds the navy. Here are stores being taken aboard the U. S. S. Houston in Chefoo, China. Thanks to advances in storage and preservation of food, sailors no longer must exist on smoked and pickled meats, dried vegetables and hard tack.

Thanks to the navy, America's clocks are kept on time. At the naval observatory in Washington is the "X" which marks the spot of zero longitude and zero latitude for all official measurement in the United States. Twenty times daily, time signals are broadcast from the observatory.

chemists who can manufacture "ersatz" or substitute materials of war. These products relieve them of some worry in the event of blockade, but there are certain essentials—like oil and cotton—which every nation must have to carry on successful warfare.

The discouraging inevitability of war has been growing in Europe's consciousness for five years, and out of that inevitability have arisen new methods of defense unparalleled in history. England, which is especially invulnerable to modern aircraft, has developed her "ARP" (air raids precaution) program to the point where almost every man, woman and child knows how to handle a gas mask. She has built bomb-proof and gas-proof cellars with feverish haste, constructed new coast defenses and trained expert anti-aircraft gunners.

But these precautions are minor compared to those of France, Germany and Czechoslovakia with their amazing "lines." Between 1929 and 1936, France employed 15,000 men to construct the Maginot line, a series of underground fortifications which extend from Belgium to Switzerland, aimed to protect the country against invasion from Germany.

When the September crisis first broke, France rushed hundreds of thousands of men into this line and Germany answered by hastening work on a similarly startling series of fortifications, the Siegfried line.

distance guns and other fiendish implements of Mars.

But the theory has not been borne out in the three conflicts the world has seen these past five years. Italy's campaign to capture Ethiopia lasted an amazingly long time, considering the crude type of opposition offered by Haile Selassie's forces. And in China the Japs have met with similar resistance. Shanghai was not captured overnight by a terrific bombing attack; the campaign lasted closer to five months.

The most striking example of modern warfare is in Spain, where two powerful forces are fighting their battles along tactics similar to those used in the World war. Madrid was bombed hundreds of times and still found itself able to hold out against Generalissimo Franco's rebel troops.

Thus, militarists of 1938 are of the opinion that warfare has not changed much in the past 20 years. As in the World war, the doughboy is the most vital factor in land conflict. A similar comparison can be made on the sea, where the battleship is still the backbone of the fleet despite mighty naval planes.

"Ersatz" to the Fore.

Perhaps the major difference between 1918 and 1938 is that gold is not now so important. The "allies" have behind them a gold reserve almost 30 times the value of that of Germany and Italy, but the latter two countries now boast of their

RIGHT—How France and Germany face each other with their amazing Maginot and Siegfried lines. BELOW—Czech soldiers, small in number but great in bravery, stand ready to defend their nation against German aggression.

Despite the fearsome thunderings of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini, a paradox of war-mad Europe is that the foes of Germany and Italy have far superior military equipment.

Though Rome and Berlin may shout and boast, a cold analysis of comparative strength shows that the inevitable "allies" can eventually defeat them in a war which might last as long as two years.

This fact has long gone unnoticed. It was not brought out until a few weeks ago when Germany opened her autumn maneuvers and began looking with hostile eyes at little Czechoslovakia, whose Sudeten German minority has allegedly been discriminated against.

Though Czechoslovakia herself is weak, though even Great Britain has a surprisingly small armed force, the mighty power of Russia and France is something to be reckoned with. Russia cannot afford to throw her entire weight against a European foe, because the threat of Japan necessitates maintenance of a good-sized force in the Far East. But the Soviet military machine is a wonder of the modern world.

In her weakened condition from the Chinese conflict, Japan cannot be considered an important factor in any current European war. The above figures on comparative military strength—furnished by the United States army and navy departments—do not even list Japan's land forces for this reason. Tokyo's only power lies in whatever "nuisance value" she might provide in Siberia to help her Fascist allies, Germany and Italy.

U. S. by Comparison.

Figures on America's military power are provided only for comparative purposes. Though the United States has abandoned her policy of complete isolation, her neutrality position is stronger than it was in the World war, when American aid was deemed necessary to crush Germany's imperialism.

Thus the lineup of great powers finds Germany and Italy on one side, opposed by Great Britain, France and Russia. Such European countries as Jugo-Slavia, Rumania and Hungary are minor factors. Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland have avowed their intention of escaping complications.

Here, then, are the figures. In actual army strength—including standing forces, airmen and reserves—Russia, France and Great Britain have 26,725,000 men. Italy and Germany have less than half, or 10,725,000.

Great Britain's navy is alone bigger than the combined fleets of Italy and Germany, whose tonnage is 1,107,032. Britain's 1,758,478 tons, plus 699,342 tons from France, makes an opposition force of 2,457,820 tons. Some of this naval equipment will not be ready to use for several months, but the actual ratio at the present time is about the same.

In air strength, the "allies" have 15,400 planes, while Germany and Italy together have 11,500.

A Week or a Year.

It is interesting, though admittedly horrifying, to contemplate how long a general European conflict could continue. Several years ago the Italian general staff made the rash prediction that the next war would be finished within a week. This belief was based on the rising importance of fast planes, gas, long-

Aunt Tibby's Trunk

By
D. J. WALSH
Copyright—WNU Service.

"BUT, Mazie," remarked Bert Howard to his pretty little wife, "it isn't quite fair that Aunt Tibby should want to come back so soon; it's less than three weeks since she left, and she had been here six months. I have no objections to your aunt; she's a nice old lady, if a bit eccentric, but you always work so hard entertaining her that you wear yourself out. Between worrying over her comfort and fussing about the safety of that old cowhide trunk, home becomes a place of torment for me instead of a haven of rest."

And then Mazie, whose bobbed crown of glory was decidedly of the shade beloved by Titian, and with a temper to correspond, replied thus: "If you were properly interested in the welfare of your family you'd want to keep Aunt Tibby here all the time! Do you fancy that she herself would be so particular about that old cowhide trunk, as you are pleased to call it, if it didn't contain valuables? She told me—no, I won't say she exactly told me, but she gave me to understand, and I know all the family have the same impression—that in it she carries her stocks and bonds. She has bequeathed the trunk to the one in whose home she happens to die."

"Mazie!" exclaimed Bert, putting his arms around his wife, "waiting for 'dead men's shoes' is sorry business! Do what you can for your aunt without making your family unhappy, but put all such ideas as you've just mentioned out of mind; they are unworthy of you!" and Bert stopped to kiss his wife good-by.

The first evening of Aunt Tibby's arrival Mazie began, "Barbara! do sit still! You'll make Aunt Tibby nervous!" or "John! don't walk so heavy!"

Aunt Tibby had been with them several weeks when she came down with a cold. The doctor called pronounced the trouble pneumonia. "Which at her age," said he (Aunt Tibby was 86), "is a serious matter. You had better get a nurse." Aunt Tibby had been so humored by her niece, however, that the nurse could do little to suit her, and Mazie was obliged to fetch and carry, to run up and down stairs until, ten days later, Aunt Tibby sank into her last sleep.

After the funeral the relatives who had gathered from far and near demanded that the will be read at once. So the old cowhide trunk was brought down to the living room and opened in the presence of all. It contained Uncle David's army uniform, a few books, half a dozen packages of old newspapers—and a long letter written by Aunt Tibby herself. This was addressed to her relatives in general and was a sort of confession. In it she stated that her income since Uncle David's death had been limited to a pension of $6 a month. That in some way the story had been circulated that this old trunk contained valuables and she had never contra-

On the Highway

It is a curious trait in human nature that we will take off our hats when a woman enters an elevator, and be most apologetic if we bump into somebody inadvertently; but the instant we get our hands on a steering wheel we damn all mankind—woman and man alike.

Too often, we are inclined to look upon traffic guides and regulations as irritating restrictions designed primarily to keep us from having a good time, when the truth of the matter is, they have been devised solely for our convenience and comfort.

dicted it, fearing if she told the truth some one might put her in an old ladies' home, an institution she detested. She trusted her relatives would pardon her and that the old trunk would be kept for her sake; that it might prove a magic casket to the owner, just as it had to her.

The trunk was left with Mazie, as she was the only person who displayed the least desire to possess it. After everyone had departed she threw her arms around her husband's neck and cried, "Oh, Bert, can you ever forgive me?" Judging by the sigh of contentment she uttered Bert's answer was satisfactory.

Aunt Tibby was right; the trunk did prove a magic casket for Mazie. It stood in the upstairs hall where she had to pass it many times a day and whenever she was seized with envy, stubbornness or a desire for finery she could not afford, one glance at the old trunk was sufficient to dispel such feelings in a twinkling.

Senators who beat "purge" may find patronage cut off . . . Move to refuse vote to reliefers takes beating in New Jersey . . . Supreme court decision is needed to clarify wages-and-hours regulation law . . . Ruling in N. R. A. case is recalled.

WASHINGTON.—With few exceptions, the United States senators involved in the purge realize that their troubles with the White House were not ended by their triumphs at the polls. Most of them are not perturbed about the elections they must now face. Of all on the list Sen. Guy M. Gillette, of Iowa, is probably in the least danger. Former Sen. Lester J. Dickinson, who has the Republican nomination against him, is an able campaigner, and was defeated in 1936 only by the overwhelming character of the Roosevelt landslide. He ran away ahead of his ticket.

Sen. Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana, is also in a little danger from his Republican opponent. But nearly all the rest of the Democrats who dared to differ with the President are in very little fear of their Republican opponents.

What they have to worry about is what is going to happen to their organizations at home when the White House is doing its utmost to build up "loyal" and "liberal" organizations in their own states. The course the White House will follow is already clear.

Normally, the senators of a state, if their party is in the majority, are very potent in their state organizations, because they can distribute so many important federal jobs. But although President Roosevelt has had very poor luck in trying to persuade the voters in Democratic primaries and conventions to reject men who opposed him, there is no way for the voters to force Mr. Roosevelt to assign patronage to the men the voters approved. And no one thinks he will do it.

Proffer of Juicy Jobs Tempting Peace Offering

Plenty of men in Mr. Roosevelt's place would call the war off and try to make friends of the men he has been fighting. He could do it easily. Most of them would be very glad to make peace, bitter as they have been and as most of them still are. Mr. Roosevelt has plenty of personal charm, however, and in addition no senator is going to fight too hard against a proffer of friendship accompanied by tenders of a whole crop of juicy jobs for the senator's political lieutenants.

This may even happen in a few cases. Most observers believe that the President will go more than halfway to meet Sen. Bennett C. Clark of Missouri, for instance. He invited Senator Gillette to lunch the moment the victorious insurgent got back from his primary. But there are some senators on that original purge list of nine with whom the President simply does not want to be friends. He wanted to "mow them down" in the primaries. Having failed there, he will try to mow them down by cutting off their political powers.

All of which foreshadows a lot of interesting fights in the senate between the President and those who do not like him, or rather those he does not like. There will be fights over confirmations, when he seeks to name political enemies of sitting senators to important jobs in their states.

This will not do the senators in question very much good, but neither will it do Mr. Roosevelt any good. For every time there is such a fight there will be plenty of publicity.

Move to Refuse Vote to Reliefers Takes Beating

The New Jersey women who wanted to refuse the ballot to all persons on relief took a terrible beating from President Roosevelt and from liberals generally. Publicly very few folks came to their support. There was a notable absence of political candidates among those publicly supporting their contention.

But we have not seen the last of this issue. It will probably never get anywhere so far as actually barring those on relief rolls from the registration lists is concerned, but it may get somewhere by indirectly affecting candidacies and issues.

Despite the lack of public support, there are a great many people in and out of public life who think the New Jersey women have a case. No politician wants to say so, because so long as the reliefers stay on the polling lists—and the extreme probability is they will stay there indefinitely—no politician wants to go out of his way to alienate their votes. But it is surprising how many senators and representatives will admit privately to their friends that a man or woman on relief should not be permitted to vote until he or she has removed that particular burden from the backs of the taxpayers.

Hopkins' Argument Does Not Please New Dealers

The best argument for the side of the New Jersey women has been presented, of course, by Harry L. Hopkins himself. His statement that "naturally" 90 per cent of the WPA workers are for Roosevelt did not sit particularly well even with New Dealers. It is one thing for Democratic leaders to point out that the Hoover administration did nothing and about how terrible the unemployment became, and how much better the Roosevelt administration is doing. That is fine, and if people, believing that, want to vote on the New Deal side in primaries and elections this year, or two years hence, no one can object.

But it is quite another thing to boast that 90 per cent of the WPA workers will support Roosevelt's candidates in primaries and elections, because the present administration is feeding them. And it becomes even worse when Hopkins' words conjure up a picture of rival candidates bidding for the relief vote by promising more and more.

There are many more people—including politicians, quiet as they may keep about it—who are shocked by this idea. More than that, they are genuinely frightened as to what it may do to this country if such practices are continued. Which is made more pointed by the fact that nobody even pretends to see the end.

This fear is entirely distinct from that which concerns more and more relief, hence more and more taxation, and eventually a financial blowup ending in destruction of present values. It is true that it is closely related, and one may lead to the other. But there are officials in Washington who have defended big relief appropriations, contending that this was the only way to pull the country out of its economic tailspin, who are genuinely disturbed over the idea of a permanent "relief vote" to which every politician hoping to get anywhere would have to cater.

Need Supreme Court Ruling To Clarify Wage-Hour Law

There will have to be some Supreme court decisions before the scope of the wages and hours regulation law is fully understood. The trouble revolves around the question: What is interstate commerce?

Administrator Elmer F. Andrews frankly admits that he does not know where to draw the dividing line. Neither does anyone else. There is plenty of opinion as to where the dividing line should be drawn, but the opinions do not agree, not even among New Dealers.

There is one very clear point, which is that most of the left wingers believe the line should be drawn very liberally, considering every business as being in interstate commerce—and therefore subject to the restrictions of the wage-hour law—which in the remotest degree affects interstate commerce.

But most of these same New Dealers admit without hesitation that they do not think the Supreme court, even with the recent changes, would go as far as they do in this direction.

Eventual decision of the wage-hour administration will probably be further to the left than the general concept, which is to say that the decision will include more business enterprises than the ordinary business man would figure were engaged in interstate commerce. If the words "affect interstate commerce" are used, naturally there is a broader base for inclusion.

But there is a serious difference of legal opinion as to whether the federal government has the right to regulate anything which merely "affects" interstate commerce without actually taking part in it.

Decision That Threw Out N. R. A. Is Recalled

For example, a rug manufacturer might establish a factory in Allentown, Pa., and restrict his sales entirely to the Keystone state. He would not be engaged in interstate commerce, but he certainly would be affecting it, to precisely the extent to which his sales displaced sales from sources out of the state. Presumably for every rug he sold one less rug would be shipped into Pennsylvania, unless he took the business away from factories already within the state.

But the Supreme court decided, in the famous Schecter "sick chicken" case, that the transaction involved there was not interstate commerce, that the federal government did not have a right to regulate it, and on that ground threw the whole NRA out the window.

Important here is the fact that this decision of the Supreme court was unanimous. Two very advanced liberals, Justices Brandeis and Cardozo, agreed with the opinion. Unless several of the present members of the court, including notably Justice Brandeis, have changed their minds right about face, the wage-hour administration may run up against some tough sledding if it seeks to go as far as the left wingers would like.

Van Becomes a Mixer

By GODFREY DOOLITTLE
© D. J. Walsh—WNU Service.

"GUESS I'll take a smoke," said James Van Dorf, after traveling bags had been stowed away, the coats had been hung, footstools had been pulled out and the three other members of his party appeared to be comfortably supplied with papers or magazines to their liking.

"Go ahead, Van, I'll stay with the girls," said Tom Pritchard, settling down to read the latest fight news.

"Now, for goodness sake, Jim, don't forget we're here and stay in the smoker all evening," cautioned Molly Van Dorf, who had traveled with her husband times enough to know that he was liable to do that very thing.

The limited pulled out of the union station a few minutes later and in due time the conductor came through the car to collect tickets. Tom produced four through tickets, remarking casually, "You'll find my brother-in-law in the smoker."

As it happened, however, Mr. Van Dorf had not gone to the smoker; instead he had stepped out on the deserted observation platform where he proceeded to enjoy his cigar and the passing panorama of the city and suburbs. There the conductor found him.

"Mr. Pritchard has my ticket," he mumbled without taking the cigar from his mouth, "going to Banff."

SHORT SHORT STORY

Complete in This Issue

Shortly after the conductor's departure, a woman stepped out on the platform and seated herself near by. "Isn't this air refreshing," she exclaimed spontaneously, taking several deep breaths. "The car gets so stuffy, I keep in the open as much as possible."

"That's my idea, too," said Mr. Van Dorf mendaciously, for he invariably spent most of his time on a train in the smoker where the air grew thick enough to be cut with a knife.

"Are you, too, taking a well-earned rest?" inquired the lady pleasantly.

"Yes," said Mr. Van Dorf, "in fact this is the first vacation I've taken in five years."

"And where are you going to play and who are your playmates to be?" asked the pleasant lady coaxingly.

"Oh, I'm with a party," he answered evasively, beginning to suspect that it might be well for him to be getting in before Molly sent Tom to find him.

"Oh, please don't let me drive you away," cried the lady as he started to rise, "you haven't half finished your smoke and I'm going to leave you to enjoy it in peace."

Mr. Van Dorf relighted his cigar. He'd take a few more puffs anyway before going inside. But just as he was about to leave a man appeared who took the lately vacated seat next to him.

"Got a match?" asked the stranger, taking a cigarette from a case. "Fine night," he went on after lighting up. "Are you going far?"

"Canadian Rockies—Banff—Lake Louise," replied Mr. Van Dorf.

"Oh, so you're touring," said the man, "with a party, I suppose."

"Uh-huh," said Mr. Van Dorf, beginning to feel a trifle irritated.

"Many in your party?"

"Four," answered Mr. Van Dorf shortly. Gosh darn it! he thought, why were people so interested in where he was going and whom he was with?

"Four!" exclaimed the man in a surprised tone. "Did I understand you to say four?"

Mr. Van Dorf arose. "Since it seems to interest you," he said coldly, "I am traveling with my wife, my brother-in-law and his wife. Let me bid you good night."

"Just a moment, old chap, do you mind telling me your brother-in-law's name?"

"His name is Pritchard, but I assure you, my good man, if you are a detective your clues have led you far afield."

"Ha-ha-ha," shouted the man, "the joke's on us all right. Did you tell the conductor that Mr. Pritchard had your ticket?"

"Certainly. He has all four of our tickets."

"Listen, old man, you see we're a party of ten being conducted on a tour to Banff by a Mrs. Pritchard and the conductor understood you to say that Mrs. instead of Mr., so our Mrs. Pritchard delegated the lady who talked to you earlier and myself to find out if you were trying to horn in on her party. It's been tried before, you see, and this really looked like a clear case."

"Where in the world did you meet all those tourists, Jim?" asked Molly the next day in the diner, "they're not even in our car."

"I'm a great mixer, my dear. I don't believe you've ever properly appreciated my ability in that line," replied Mr. Van Dorf, a trifle nervously, as a smiling young woman bowed to him from across the next table.

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses Sugar, Sirup and Molasses; Describes Correct Use of Sweets, Peerless Body Fuel

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THERE is an old saying that good things come in small packages. That is particularly apt when we pause to consider the nutritive value of sugar in its various forms. For two scant tablespoons of sugar supply as much caloric value as does three-fourths cup of cooked farina, or one and one-third eggs, or the lean meat of one lamb chop.

Sugar is a highly concentrated fuel food which burns quickly and completely in the body furnace.

The Sugar Bowl is a Dynamo. It has been said that our present day civilization could not have reached its present heights without the driving force that sugar gives to men and women. And it is a fact that until comparatively recent times, only the very wealthy could afford this quick energy food which we now consume at the rate of more than 4,000,000 tons a year, or more than 100 pounds annually for every man, woman and child.

This peerless fuel food was once regarded almost as a medicine because of its ability to relieve fatigue and sustain vitality. And no wonder! For sugar is transformed into heat and power in less time and with less effort than any other foodstuff.

A Real Stimulant. While starchy foods require an average of from three to four hours for digestion, the body begins to burn a ration of sugar from 10 to 30 minutes after it is eaten.

It reaches the blood and muscles in a few minutes—as rapidly in fact as alcohol! That is why concentrated sweets, which are largely sugar, are so effective in combating fatigue.

Athletic coaches are well aware of the unique power of sugar as a stimulant and restorative of energy. That is why school and college youths are so frequently given highly sweetened beverages and other concentrated sweets before engaging in athletic competition.

Military leaders also appreciate how it increases endurance, and sweets are an important part of the soldier's ration. During the World War civilians were urged to reduce their consumption of sugar in order to make larger amounts available for the army, and most people found it difficult indeed to forego this agreeable food.

Sugar is such an indispensable ingredient in cakes, cookies, pies, puddings and ice creams, it is so necessary in beverages, on breakfast cereals and with fruits that it seems a great hardship to do without it even for one meal.

We are extremely fortunate, most people will agree, to live in an age when sugar is so high in quality and so reasonable in price. In the Thirteenth century when sugar was introduced to England through India, it cost the equivalent of ten dollars a pound in the monetary terms of today.

Refined sugar is now priced at a few cents a pound and one pound supplies over 1,800 calories! Moreover, when you buy a branded product, backed by a well-known name, you have the assurance that quality and purity are of the highest.

Moderate Use Desirable. Like all sources of great power, however, sugar must be handled with care. Too much sugar may prove as disastrous as too little. Possibly because of this, several false notions have grown up regarding this splendid food.

It is often charged that sweets cause indigestion, and it is true that when consumed in excess, they may ferment and result in irritation. Therefore, moderation should be the watchword.

But that is an excellent rule to follow in regard to all kinds of foods. For when consumed to excess, any food ceases to be beneficial.

It has also been charged that sweets are harmful to the teeth. But recent investigations suggest that the teeth are far more likely to deteriorate because the proper minerals and vitamins have not been included in the diet.

It is, however, desirable to restrict the amount of sugar given to children. That is because it quickly satisfies the appetite and may therefore decrease the consumption of other good and necessary foods, particularly those containing an abundance of minerals and vitamins. Children therefore can best take sweets in the form of sweetened puddings, gelatin, cooked and fresh fruits, and fruit juice and milk beverages.

A Food of Many Forms. The quick pick-up of sugar can be obtained in many forms besides the sparkling crystals of granulated sugar with which we are most familiar, or the brown sugar which is quite similar in composition, except for a larger moisture content, despite popular notions to the contrary.

Most fruits contain easily digestible sugars, the percentage in dried fruits ranging from 50 to 75 per cent. Milk sugar is also easily digested. Honey, molasses, corn sirup and the popular blended sirups are usually eaten in combination with other foods and are therefore unlikely to be consumed in too large amounts.

Corn sirup is often added to milk, fruits, vegetables, cereals, breads and desserts. It helps to make these foods more palatable and adds 60 calories with every tablespoon. It is so easily digested that it is often used in infant feeding.

Molasses provides significant amounts of both calcium and iron and is a good sweet for growing children. One and one-half tablespoons of molasses supplies as much calcium as one and one-half cups of diced carrots. It is a wise mother, therefore, who uses it in making the cookies that children like so well.

The mixed or blended sirups that are so popular with griddle cakes and french toast on cool fall days, also add palate appeal and energy values to the diet.

For in whatever form sugar is consumed, it remains nature's shortest to press-the-button heat and quick, healthful stimulation. ©—WNU—C. Houston Goudiss—1938—30.

HOW to SEW By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

M. S. writes: "I followed the directions in Book 2 for a fabric hat and it was so satisfactory that I wonder if you could tell me how to use a piece of woolen material that I have to make a hat for my little girl who is just starting to school?"

Here is a cunning schoolgirl hat that's easy to make. You need two pieces of goods—one for the hat and one for the lining. They may either match or contrast. Each piece should be 1-inch longer than the measurement around the largest part of the child's head. The depth of the pieces should be half their length. The diagram at the upper right of this sketch shows how to make a paper pattern for the hat. Cut a square piece of paper 1/2-inch wider and deeper than half the head measurement. Mark point A on the right edge half way between the top and bottom as shown. Points B and C are marked at the center top and bottom of the paper. The dotted lines are guide lines to help shape the curved lines between A and B and C and D. Point D is the center front of the top of the hat pattern and is placed on a fold of the goods in cutting each of the two layers. The diagonal line from A to C is the center back seam line.

Stitch the back seam of both hat and lining and press it open as at E. Now, place the two pieces right sides together and stitch as at F. Turn right side out, baste along turned edge and stitch as at G. Gather the top as at H and finish with a ribbon or a stitched fabric bow and a feather.

The Bill of Rights

By
RAYMOND PITCAIRN

A year ago the American people observed with nationwide celebrations the 150th anniversary of our Constitution, written during the summer of 1787.

A year from now they will probably observe with impressive ceremony the sesqui-centennial of our Bill of Rights, which was adopted September 25, 1789.

And at this time—the 149th anniversary of the Bill of Rights—many thousands of Americans pay their tribute to the guarantees of liberty which those first ten amendments wrote into our National Charter.

Such tribute is well earned. For, to the original Constitution the Bill of Rights added a determined expression of that spirit of personal dignity, independence and self-reliance which has been the outstanding characteristic of the true American throughout the century and a half of our history.

Here are some of the rights which those ten amendments assure:

Freedom of religion, freedom of the press, freedom of speech and of peaceable assembly.

The right to trial by jury, the right to petition the government for redress of wrongs, the right to own private property, and all other rights not expressly surrendered to government.

Protection against imprisonment without legal process, against being twice tried on the same charge, against excessive bail or cruel and unusual punishment, against unreasonable search or seizure by government authorities, and against the quartering of soldiers on householders in time of peace.

Retention by the states, or the people, of all powers not expressly delegated to the national government by the Constitution.

These are rights that our fathers wrote into the Constitution. They are rights upon which successive generations of Americans have insisted. They are rights which must be guarded now as loyally as they were guarded in the past. They remain our strongest bulwark against the threats of "isms" and tyrannies, which today threaten so much of the world, whether from without or within.

They are the rights that made America. And to preserve them is our responsibility.
